Mr. Hooper Comments On Proposed Randolph Power Project

The following statement was issued this week by C. S. Hooper, Jr., general manager of the Southside Electric Cooperative, in Crewe:

"Recent articles in newspapers and on radio and television, many developed by the "Friends of the Staunton River", and other opponents of the Randolph Power Project, leads one to conclude that the SEC Feasibility Study, including decisions as to the number of dams to be built, amount of acreage to be flooded or otherwise affected, and the status of homes and persons who could be affected, has already been completed and determined.

"The feasibility study is nearing completion on the economic aspects of this project, and this information will be made a part of the quarterly report required by the Federal Power Commission to be submitted on September 30.

"However, there are some firm conclusions already available which will be a part of this report, but all too many comments have been made on the project by opponents, as the study advances, prior to knowledge of the facts.

"The varied articles that have been written by the "Friends of the Staunton River", a Charlotte County based organization and other outspoken opponents of this project, could be well intended, but SEC members need both the positive as well as the negative points of view.

"The Randolph Power Project, as the study is reflecting, is not perfect, but it has a greater potential to be developed for the generation of electric energy than any other area in Virginia.

"The Southside Electric Cooperative management and Board of Directors have a responsibility to the consumer-members, to provide adequate and dependable electric power in the assigned service area at the lowest possible cost.

"In 1976, the SEC was granted by the Federal Power Commission a permit to study the feasibility of developing electric generating facilities on the Staunton-Roanoke river watershed and was granted a 3-year period in which to make this study.

"This permit is a guarantee to the SEC membership that any money spent and efforts expended will be used for their benefit. Firm information on this study today is still incomplete, but conclusions by engineers indicate that the project is economically feasible.

"The study indicates a dam could be built near Phenix to create a cooling pond of approximately 9,000 acres. The water level would be stable with no more than two feet variation between high and low water levels. This lake would have 141 miles of shoreline and would offer recreational facilities equal to the North Anna generating complex in Louisa County owned by VEPCO.

"A study of existing maps and surveys show that less than 100 homes would be affected by the construction of the Cub Creek lake.

"Steam generating facilities would be located near Phenix and in close proximity to the railroad. Railroad service to the plant would make delivery of raw materials for construction and plant operation.

"This generation plant will be based on economics of construction, operation and output, and of a size that would provide for the needs of all the cooperatives and some municipalities in Virginia, not just the Southside Electric Cooperative. One of the most desirable aspects of the Randolph Power Project is that it lends itself to orderly economic development as the need for electric energy increases over the next 20 to 30 year period.

"The fishing industry will surely benefit by the addition of the lakes. Fishing for striped bass in a fresh water lake began with the construction of Kerr Lake. The feasibility study presently shows that 75% of spawning grounds for stripped bass is in the Dan River and will not be affected by any portion of the proposed Randolph Power Project.

"Some productive farm land will be flooded when and if the proposed lakes are constructed. Some unproductive swamp land will become a valuable asset.

"The total timber that will be lost in the development will be negligable compared to the benefits that might be received from increased value of land adjacent to the project.

"The control of emission from any type of steam plant today must assure the local crop and timber farmer that his crop would not be damaged; such as is seen at the Carolina Light and Power Company -- Roxboro plant; Danville Municipal Generating Plant, Danville; the Virginia Electric and Power Company's plant -- Bremo Bluff, Fluvanna County; and the VEPCO plant -- Chesterfield. In fact, water from the lakes might be used by local farmers for irrigation of their productive farm lands.

"The availability of adequate and dependable electric energy in Southside Virginia will encourage industrial development that will in turn provide new jobs and new markets
